

Fashions to Take You Up, Up and Away

It's never been easier to travel in style! Easy wrinkle-free fabrics and pieces that transfer beautifully from day to night... so dress it up or down, either way you can't go wrong!

This knit dress from Anthropologie is the perfect piece to add a splash of color and pulls perfectly out of a suitcase. Wear it with booties for day and heels or over-the-knee boots for a night in a new town. It's paired here with a cozy vest from Altar'd State (both retailers located at Watters Creek/Allen and multiple other locations).

MODEL BEHAVIOR

Go-getter Amy Lafitte says being a fashion model has long been on her bucket list. "Modeling fashions with $7 million helicopters was a blast. I would have done it for free," says the self-proclaimed "entrepreneur, coffee-obsessed, health and wellness enthusiast" and, now, fashion model.

Professionally, Amy is flying high... she is ranked the number one Javita manager in Texas and leads a team of independent distributors who are equally passionate about the weight-loss coffee and health-focused teas and drinks. All eyes are on this sleek charcoal Sassy Threads swing dress (Primp Boutique/McKinney) topped with a Michael Kors bomber jacket. Jewelry and booties from Anthropologie (Watters Creek/Allen).

All photos shot on location at Bell Helicopter. Since 1935, Bell Helicopter, headquartered in Fort Worth, has set the pace for the helicopter industry, expanding the scope of vertical lift. Bell manufactures military and commercial helicopters and provides training worldwide.

"We do training here that you can't get anywhere else in the world," says Chief Flight Instructor, Martin Wright, about the Bell Helicopter Training Academy's stellar training program. "All of our flight instructors have no fewer than 2,500 flight hours or 1,000 instruction hours. A lot of these instructors are also post-military, so they have much more than that."
